

Hello,

I am writing to express my concern about the FCC's involvement in the current Indiana Law protecting my home from telemarketing. I strongly disapprove of this law being altered or lessened to create a more leniant federal law. My home used to receive anywhere from 10-15 calls a day from telephone "scams". It is very nice knowing that I am not going to be receiving annoying, and on occasion harassing, calls from telemarketers in my time at home and at all hours of the day. The only people I have to speak to now are the companies that I make the initiative to contact, no one else. That is very comforting to me and I don't want it changed. I can agree with a Federal law that is as tight as the current Indiana Law, or even more forbidding, but to lessen this law would be a tragedy. Please do not lessen Indiana's telephone privacy law. Help us protect our right to privacy from these corporations.
